INTRODUCTION

Thank you for scheduling a visit to the core exhibit of the Kentucky History Center, A Kentucky Journey. This 20,000-square-foot installation is a walk through time, complete with the sights, sounds, and even smells of the past. Eight chronological areas feature artifacts, images, and life-size environments that evoke places in time. A ready-reference area in the center of the exhibit provides a place to delve deeper into exhibit topics.

This guide is intended to help you prepare your intermediate and middle-level students for visiting the museum and to make authentic connections to KDE curriculum documents. Contents include:

- A diagram of the exhibit;
- A listing of exhibit links to social studies, arts, and language arts content and processes in the Program of Studies for Kentucky Schools;
- Touring guides that explain the orientation program and suggest ideas for motivating students in the galleries;
- Ideas for developing writing assignments based on the museum;
- Exhibit guides that describe the chronological areas and list details to explore;
- Resource lists that suggest adult and children’s books that can be used for follow-up activities.

We hope these materials will help you tailor your students’ visit to your curriculum. Please do not hesitate to call us if you need additional information.

TOURING GUIDE

ORIENTATION

OVERVIEW
Guided by a KHS staff member, students use artifacts, images, quotes, and their bodies to create a human timeline. The completed timeline serves as an introduction to the exhibit, A Kentucky Journey.

CURRICULUM CONNECTIONS

Topics
- Chronology
- Kentucky history
- Sources of information

Academic Expectations
- Accessing sources of information
- Observing
- Listening
- Historical perspective

BACKGROUND
This fifteen-to-twenty-minute program involves students in the identification of major eras in Kentucky and American history and the interpretation of a variety of sources of historical information. The eras, which define the eight areas of the exhibit, A Kentucky Journey, are:
- Prehistory (Area B) – 10,000 B.C.-A.D. 1750
- Frontier (Area C) – 1750-1800
- Antebellum (D) – 1800-1860
- Civil War and Reconstruction (Area E) – 1860-1875
- Gilded Age (Area F) – 1875-1900
- New Century (Area G) – 1900-1930
- Depression and World War II (Area H) – 1930-1950
- Postwar and Contemporary Kentucky (Area I) – 1950-1999

In the orientation program, students use a collection of artifacts, images, and quotes to identify the eras and examine change over time. These materials represent primary sources created at the time they describe or demonstrate. Secondary sources, such as textbooks, are created by historians, writers, and others based on research and interpretation of primary sources.

BEFORE THE TRIP
- Review time terminology (year, decade, century, millennium). Talk about the difference between these measurable units of time and more subjective units, like generations and era (Intermediate).
- Introduce the concept of timelines by charting a school day on a timeline. Or, challenge students to create timelines of their lives or a favorite topic (Intermediate).
- Examine texts and other history books to learn how historians have divided time into eras. Predict the eras of Kentucky history in the exhibit or review them using the materials in this guide (Middle).
- Brainstorm a list of sources for studying the past and sort them into primary and secondary categories (Intermediate/Middle). Discuss the reliability of different kinds of sources (Middle).

IN THE MUSEUM
You can help the staff member conduct the program by
- Telling her or him your plans for seeing the exhibit and other features in the Center
- Making sure as many students as possible get a chance to participate; and
- Keeping order!

After the orientation, your guide will escort you to the exhibit and get you started. Once in the exhibit, you are on your own!

We rely on teachers and chaperones to make sure students behave well in the museum, and we reserve the right to ask disruptive students or classes to leave.

MUSEUM ETIQUETTE
- Talk, don’t yell!
- Walk, don’t run!
- Use pencils and notebooks or clipboards for assignments.
- Leave all food, beverages, and chewing gum outside the exhibit hall.
- Do not use laptops, laser pointers, or video equipment in the exhibit.

SELF-GUIDED TOUR TACTICS

OVERVIEW
We hope your visit to the History Center coincides with a unit of study. We encourage you to contact us for more specific information if it will help you plan your visit. To avoid the “pinball effect” that sometimes occurs when students are turned loose in a big museum exhibit, we urge you to develop a touring plan. The ideas below suggest general strategies for exploring the exhibit and accessing its many resources.

TOURING TACTICS WITH CURRICULUM CONNECTIONS
If your visit coincides with the study of a period of history, consider these options:

- Go directly to the exhibit area that interprets the era and focus on it first, using the Exhibit Guides to develop a plan.
- Challenge student groups to gather information from the rest of the exhibit to compare to the period you are studying. Assign groups an exhibit area or a theme that appears throughout.

If your unit is based on a theme or issue:

- Contact us for a list of related exhibit features by calling or e-mailing: vicky.middleswarth@ky.gov
- Arm your students with notebooks and challenge them to record pertinent information and make sketches from the entire exhibit; or
- Assign groups specific eras to examine closely and encourage “enlightened browsing” in the remaining areas.

If your visit is part of an extended unit, such as Kentucky Studies or U.S. History, you can

- Use the exhibit early in the unit to pique interest in the theme and generate lists of events, figures, and other topics to research back in the classroom; or
- Access exhibit sources to supplement student research projects (make sure to contact us before your visit to be certain we have what you need!); or
- Identify, discuss, sketch, and write about “the real things” that correspond to and enhance information in your texts.

Although exhibit resources can be used to teach the content and processes of many academic expectations, they are best suited to historical perspective. To help students strengthen historical thinking skills while touring the exhibit, consider the following:

- To aid chronological understanding, give students blank timelines and challenge them to note the most significant events exhibited in each era, or create chronologies on themes of their choice.
- To explore change over time, arm students with blank Venn diagrams and assign them two eras to compare and contrast. Or, create matrices for comparing one or more topics through several periods.
- To help students learn about cause-and-effect relationships, create worksheets or notebooks with two columns, one for events and another for their causes. Assign events to research or challenge students to identify their own.
- Provide practice in using a variety of research tools by challenging groups to identify three sources—print, visual, artifact—related to a topic or issue and take notes on each.
- To examine the impact of individuals on history, ask students to discover a person who made Kentucky history. Or, challenge groups to find a series of people who contributed over time to politics, business, the arts, and so on.
TOURING GUIDE
Writing and the Museum

OVERVIEW
For many students, museum visits are memorable experiences. Writing about objects, images, and ideas encountered in tours and exhibits can help channel learning. The subjects and formats of student writing assignments depend on how the museum visit dovetails with the curriculum. The Kentucky Writing Program has identified several purposes for student writing:

- To learn (learning logs, response journals, observation logs, admit and exit slips)
- To demonstrate learning (essay tests, academic essays or paragraphs, open response, and writing associated with CATS assessments)
- For real purposes/audiences (personal narratives, letters to government officials or school personnel, brochures or pamphlets, short stories, editorials, articles, poetry, and reviews)

The following sample assignments suggest ways that museum-based writing can contribute to research, assess learning, or serve a real-world purpose.

WRITING TO LEARN
When the museum is viewed as a learning resource for a unit of study, writing assignments can give students chances to gather and reflect on new knowledge. Examples might include:

- Primary students visiting the museum as part of a unit on families create word-and-picture logs that identify and explain objects that show how families worked together in the past.
- Fourth-graders studying the state’s early development keep observation logs comparing aspects of daily life in prehistoric, frontier, and antebellum Kentucky.
- Eighth-grade social studies students exploring the impact of wars on American history work on double-entry journals to record information about the civilians in the Civil War and personal feelings about war’s effects on society.

WRITING TO DEMONSTRATE LEARNING
Writing assignments given after the museum visit can challenge students to recall what they have learned in the museum while using critical and creative thinking skills. Examples might include:

- Primary students studying Native Americans work in pairs to create picture or alphabet books that explain aspects of Kentucky Indian life encountered in Area B, “First Kentuckians.”
- After exploring Area C, “The Kentucky Frontier,” fifth-graders create advice books for new settlers to the region.
- Eighth graders who have examined Area D, “The Antebellum Age,” and Area E, “War and Aftermath,” write imaginary diaries describing the lives of Kentucky slaves.

REAL PURPOSE/AUDIENCE WRITING
In order to help students understand the value of being able to write, assignments must involve purposes and audiences other than the teacher. Museum examples might include:

- Primary students visiting Frankfort as part of a unit on “our state” create poster exhibits to share with other classes back at school by arranging snapshots taken on the trip on bulletin boards and writing captions that explain the pictures.
- Fourth-graders help their teachers persuade school officials of the value of museum visits to a unit of study by writing letters to the principal explaining what they did on the trip that could not have been accomplished in the classroom.
- Middle-school students provide guidance for museum staff trying to make tours and exhibits more appealing to young adults by writing reviews of the museum through a young adult’s eyes. To create a truly authentic audience for this kind of assignment, plan to share student reviews with KHS staff!

PORTFOLIO ENTRIES
We hope students’ experiences in A Kentucky Journey will lead to writing that can be included in portfolios. The following ideas can provide practice for personal expressive, literary, and transactive writing.

- Personal narratives about an element of the exhibit that is especially meaningful to the writer
- Poems that summarize exhibit themes
- Short stories or scripts incorporating information gathered in learning logs
- Brochures about exhibit themes for students who did not participate in the field trip
- Letters to museum staff recommending changes to the exhibit to make it more student-friendly
- Reviews of the exhibit or the History Center
- Handbooks for effective exhibit touring for teachers and students planning visits in the future
- Articles for the school newspaper about the exhibit or the trip
- Reports for school administrators about the value of the trip

OVERVIEW
This area examines Kentucky’s native people—from ancient Paleoindian hunters to the Shawnee and Cherokee who claimed the region when the first white explorers arrived. Exhibit features include:

- A life-size structure and mural of a Green River hunting camp of the Archaic Period, 5000 years ago
- Displays about lifeways, native communities, rituals and ceremonies, and contact between cultures

BACKGROUND
Daily Life
Native American peoples lived, hunted, and farmed the land that became Kentucky for thousands of years before Europeans arrived. Even the earliest prehistor-
Cultures in Contact

Indian groups did not live in isolation. Contact between native cultures beginning as early as the Archaic Period led to the extensive transcontinental trade networks of the Woodland and Late Prehistoric Periods. When European explorers and hunters arrived, they found people accustomed to trading for goods not available locally. For the natives, trade with the Europeans evolved from a mutually beneficial endeavor to the dependence on foreign goods that threatened traditional culture.

Background

Newfound Paradise

Dreams of economic gain lured the first Euroamericans over the Appalachians. Buffalo, deer, and beaver attracted hunters and fur traders in the 1760s. In the years that followed, fertile land and the mild climate drew farmers, rich and poor, to Kentucky. Speculators joined the first settlers, eager to obtain land for resale. The wave of settlement began at Fort Harrod in 1774. By 1800, nearly two hundred forts and stations had been established.

Growing Communities

Towns grew quickly on the frontier. As commercial centers, they attracted merchants and craftspeople who sold and traded goods with farmers, hunters, and Indians. As social centers, they became the location of educational, religious, and political endeavors. From rough-and-tumble ports like Limestone to “well-appointed” towns like Lexington, these frontier communities symbolized the rapid transformation of the “wilderness.”

Domestic Life

Families composed the majority of Kentucky’s pioneers. Although they built stations for defense, they raised houses and planted crops at the earliest opportunity. Corn, grain, and livestock were the mainstays of these yeoman farmers. Those with large families or African American slaves stood the best chance of succeeding. While they raised most of their food and made clothing and furniture, few were entirely self-sufficient. They also turned to their neighbors for work and social events and formed schools and churches together.

Forging a Commonwealth

Plowing fields and building cabins were only part of the process of settling the frontier. Before settlers could live in safety, they had to resolve their differences with the Indians who hunted the region. They also had to deal with foreign powers that controlled access to trade routes. To govern their own affairs, they had to decide whether to separate from Virginia and create a new state.

BACKGROUND
A Growing Economy
A growing population of free and slave labor boosted Kentucky’s economy during the antebellum period. Agriculture and industries such as milling, distilling, and ropemaking brought prosperity to the commonwealth. Investors built roads to encourage trade. Locks and dams were constructed to open the state’s waterways to steamboats. A new transportation network made Kentucky’s products available to markets outside the state.

A Society of Contrasts
The antebellum years were a time of social and cultural diversity. A wealthy minority furnished their country estates and urban townhouses with finely crafted Kentucky furniture and silver, patronized the arts, and sent their children to private academies. For a few decades, Lexington, with its artists, theaters, and Transylvania University, was known as the “Athens of the West.” At the same time, over one-fifth of the population was African American slaves who had no rights and little hope of betterment. Likewise, the Irish and German immigrants who arrived during this era enjoyed freedom but faced discrimination and even violence. Across the countryside, yeoman farmers eking a living out of the land composed the majority of the population.

BACKGROUND
A State Divided
White Kentuckians held conflicting views of slavery before the war. Emancipationists and abolitionists opposed slavery, though they disagreed on the best way to end it. Divided over slavery and torn between economic and social ties with both North and South, Kentucky declared its neutrality at the start of the war.

War Comes to Kentucky
The war affected all Kentuckians—rich, poor, black, and white. Divided loyalties tore families apart. Perhaps as many as thirty thousand Kentucky soldiers died from battle wounds, accidents, and disease. Although Louisville businesses prospered, farmers lost crops and livestock to both armies. Slaves who joined the Union army faced discrimination, while those who remained at home were closely watched.

Reconstructing Kentucky
The Union victory did not resolve divisions within Kentucky. Some whites so opposed freedom for slaves that they turned to violence, attacking and lynching blacks throughout the state. Federal programs designed to help and protect African Americans angered even more Kentuckians. Forced by constitutional amendments to recognize black civil rights, many embittered white Kentuckians embraced the “lost cause” of the Confederacy for years after the war’s end.

OVERVIEW
This area explores the last quarter of the nineteenth century, a period of great change for the nation but one when many Kentuckians lived as they had for generations. Exhibit features include:

- A life-size setting representing the 1883 Southern Exposition
- A Victorian parlor setting
- Thematic areas that explore industry and agriculture, social life, and the violence that plagued Kentucky into the early twentieth century.

BACKGROUND
Smokestacks and Haystacks
The industrial age began slowly in Kentucky. Louisville led the way with the factories, systems of transportation, and public utilities showcased in the Southern Exposition of 1883. In eastern and western Kentucky, coal mining and timbering challenged agriculture as a way of life. Farms began to grow the new burley tobacco and experimented with laborsaving equipment, but most lacked access to new technology.

Kentucky’s Victorian era
Middle- and upper-class Kentuckians living in the state’s larger towns and cities often embraced the Victorian lifestyle. African Americans and poor whites shared few of the new consumer pleasures. In most of the commonwealth, people still lived on farms, where life went on much as it had for generations.

Violent Times
From the Civil War through the first third of the twentieth century, a series of violent events put Kentucky in the national spotlight. Feuds, a governor’s assassination, and tobacco wars created an image that continued well into the twentieth century. Although violence was not unique to Kentucky, the kind, number, and duration of the incidents hurt the state’s chances of becoming a national leader.

King Coal
The first quarter of the twentieth century was a time of growth and change for the eastern Kentucky coal industry. The promises of good wages and the comforts of a “modern” company town convinced natives to abandon their farms and attracted European immigrants and African Americans from the Deep South to the mines. While some prospered, all confronted dangerous working conditions and the limits placed on economic and political freedom by the companies. For many, mining introduced a new kind of poverty that ultimately led to the labor unrest of later decades.

Progress and Reform
Kentuckians shared the idealism of reformers nationwide that social problems could be eliminated by individual and group action. Kentucky women played an important role in the movement for suffrage and temperance. Natives and reformers from outside the state worked to improve education and health care for the poor.
The “Americanization” of Kentucky
The first half of the twentieth century saw Kentuckians adopting the trappings of mass culture while clinging to treasured traditions. Automobiles and mule-drawn wagons shared the streets. Magazines, radio, and movies brought national trends across the state. Baseball was the national pastime and young people danced to lively new tunes. Authors, artists, and musicians reflected Kentuckians’ mixed response, blending old and new in local color novels and bluegrass music.

BACKGROUND
On the Farm
From its earliest years, Kentucky staked its future on agriculture. After the Civil War, corn and hemp gave way to tobacco, a crop that both “held the state hostage and paid the ransom.” Although it required hand cultivation, a small tobacco patch could produce big returns. As America became an industrialized nation, Kentucky tobacco farmers clung to a traditional way of life.

Depression and Relief
The Great Depression hit hard in a state suffering from the effects of Prohibition, a declining coal economy, and a decade-long agricultural depression. A 1930 drought devastated many farms and a 1937 flood damaged dozens of river towns, further slowing the state’s recovery. But federal programs resulted in new roads and buildings and economic assistance that benefited city dwellers and farm families alike.

The Home Front
World War II was a watershed for Kentucky. After years of stagnation, the economy boomed as farms and factories produced goods essential to the war effort. Record numbers of enlisted Kentuckians fought all over the world. Those who stayed at home prospered as the war ensured jobs for everyone.

National Events Reflected in Kentucky
National political issues of the 1960s and 1970s affected everyday life in Kentucky. Traditional social patterns changed in response to the struggle for civil rights, the War on Poverty in Appalachia, the Vietnam controversy, and the women’s movement. In the 1980s and 1990s, Kentuckians went to war in the Middle East, while major changes occurred at home as a result of education and health-care reforms.

Changing Economy
In recent years Kentucky has experienced economic changes similar to those occurring across the nation. Although agriculture and the extractive industries have continued to be important, diversification into new economic sectors has created jobs and decreased dependence on single sources. By improving its transportation infrastructure and increasing manufacturing, Kentucky has strengthened its place in the national and global economy.
During the past fifty years, Kentuckians have enriched American life with musical and theatrical performances, written words, and athletic achievements. From country music singers and local color novelists to award-winning actors and Olympic athletes, these special people have shown the world what Kentucky has to offer.
